Laughing Matters

A Play About Surviving Cancer With Humour Intact

Written and Performed by Kymme Patrick

In this play we are introduced to the hardly disguised and indomitable spirit of Kymme, whose personal courage is fueled by her most powerful and endearing asset, that being her ability to see through the surface of serious circumstances to reveal with humor such truths about the human condition that inspire hope and serenity, and an unyielding faith in one's ability to overcome both those obstacles in the world around us as well as those innermost fears that would otherwise block our confidence in forging ahead on our life's journey.

"This play was an emotional journey from crying to laughter. I related with the character as a hygienist who has treated cancer patients, and as a patient who has been through some of these same situations and emotions."

"A brilliant mix of entertainment and education focusing on rising incidence of oral cancer and implications for prevention and treatment."

"The writing and the acting are outstanding. It really is a Must See"
